1. What is localStorage?

We use a web browser technology called localStorage. We may save a small text file directly in your web browser that contains an anonymous, randomly generated ID and a reference to the specific content layout you saw. Unlike traditional HTTP cookies, localStorage allows us to save a small amount of data directly in your web browser. This data remains on your device even after you close your browser. Data in your localStorage does not contain any directly identifiable personal information. While we may generate an anonymous, randomly generated ID if necessary to link preferences to a unique session, this ID is solely for the purpose of maintaining your selected preferences on your device and is not used to track you across other websites or for advertising purposes.

2. What we store and why we do this?

We do not store any information about you when you visit our website unless you explicitly consent to us personalising the content.

When you fill out our contact form, you have the option of consenting to us personalising the website's content for you during future visits. If you give your consent to this, we will save a setting in your web browser that ensures you are met by the same version of the website that you saw when you submitted the form. The sole purpose of this is to create a more consistent and recognizable experience for you as a returning visitor. This function is only activated if you actively check the consent box in our contact form.

3. Your control over localStorage.

You have full control over the data stored in your browser's localStorage. You can manage or clear the information stored in your browser's localStorage at any time through your browser settings. The exact steps vary by browser, but typically involve going to your browser's settings or privacy section and looking for options to clear "site data," "local storage," or "Browse data." You have full control and can withdraw your consent at any time. The easiest way to do this is by clearing website data (including localStorage) in your web browser. After you have cleared the data, you will be treated as a new visitor again.
